Lesson Description

|                               |  |
|-------------------------------|--|
| Overview               | Through a group discussion about emotions, the students will colour in the worksheet and add in details related to their feelings.   |
| Activity               | <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>To begin, discuss with the students what a half smile is and how it relates to turtles. Continue the discussion by telling the students what a half smile can do for their own emotions and behaviour.</li> <li>In a circle, or individually, ask the students to remember a time when they felt sad, angry, or upset. Distribute first page of the attached worksheet and have the student's colour in the image of the beach. Students should add in any additional characters, symbols, and choose the weather that best fits how they are feeling in the moment (e.g. rain, a sad person, dark colours, etc.).</li> <li>Next, tell the students to put on a half smile, then ask if they notice a change in their emotions (even a tiny bit).</li> <li>Distribute the second page of the attached worksheet and ask the students to keep their half smile on when they colour the worksheet again. The students should include characters, symbols, and weather that reflects their new emotions (e.g. rainbow, sunshine, butterfly, puppy, flowers, friends, family, bright colours, etc.).</li> </ol> |
| Background Information | The mouth of a turtle is called a beak. Most of Ontario's turtles have a natural smile because of the shape of their beaks, but especially the Blanding's turtle; it looks like it is always smiling because of the yellow throat. Sometimes when we feel sad or upset for a long period of time, it can be hard to change our feelings. Putting on a half-smile, just like a turtle, is a really easy way to trigger your   |
